ENGAGING SCHOOL AGED VOLUNTEERS

Carolyn White, Jim Hill High School

- Perspective of middle- and high school students
- Seeing a trend towards volunteerism/community service on college applications – she writes rec letters for students outlining their volunteer service
- Age can be a factor; not every location can use the younger students
- Young students feel most comfortable volunteering as a group (be creative in how to access this group talent!)
- Transportation is a factor for students who don't yet have their drivers' licenses
- International Baccalaureate program at Jim Hill stresses volunteering, with an innovative twist – there are 8 learning objectives to accomplish (in whatever creative ways students decide to interpret them) instead of a set number of hours required
- Art students painted pillowcases and donated them to breast cancer center at a hospital

Gloria Watson, Tougaloo College

- Tougaloo College has volunteerism/community service woven into the fabric of the curriculum. This: 1) allows the students to give back, and 2) allows students to explore outside of the academic framework.
- Need 60+ hours to graduate – encourage them to do this as freshman, sophs, and juniors
- Learning outcome → “How can I (the Tougaloo student) make the world a better place?” Community service is the mechanism to allow students to answer this question

- Must get project approved (partnership with a nonprofit or community partner, such as a government agency or hospital)
- 1,200 word reflective essay required explaining the project, must receive at least a “2” (scale of 1-4)
- Projects teach critical thinking and analytical thinking

Ann Taylor, MS Museum of Natural Science

- You must identify the skillsets of potential volunteers
- Formulate a clear idea of what your organization needs/wants, so you can match volunteers with appropriate “jobs” in your organization
- Communication is key – what does the vol expect? What does the organization expect?
- Be creative and think outside the box to engage volunteers! → Take a lesson from the joke: “First one to the top of the tree, wins.” (contestants include a monkey, a bird, and a goldfish in a bowl)
- Document your successes – journal, photos, blogs, drawings...
